

Vote Totals by the Batch

Sources: County Auditors in each county listed provided the records used in this analysis.

There are four charts for each county listed. Each county analysis includes the following:

1. The top chart shows the margin of victory for each batch, in the order they were scanned in over the 2+ weeks they process, scan, and tabulate the ballots.

A blue line represents Biden’s margin of victory for that batch, while a red line represents Trump’s margin of victory for the batch.

A short line, not deviating far from the center line, means that blue or red candidate won that batch by a small number of votes. A long line means that batch was won by a lot of votes.

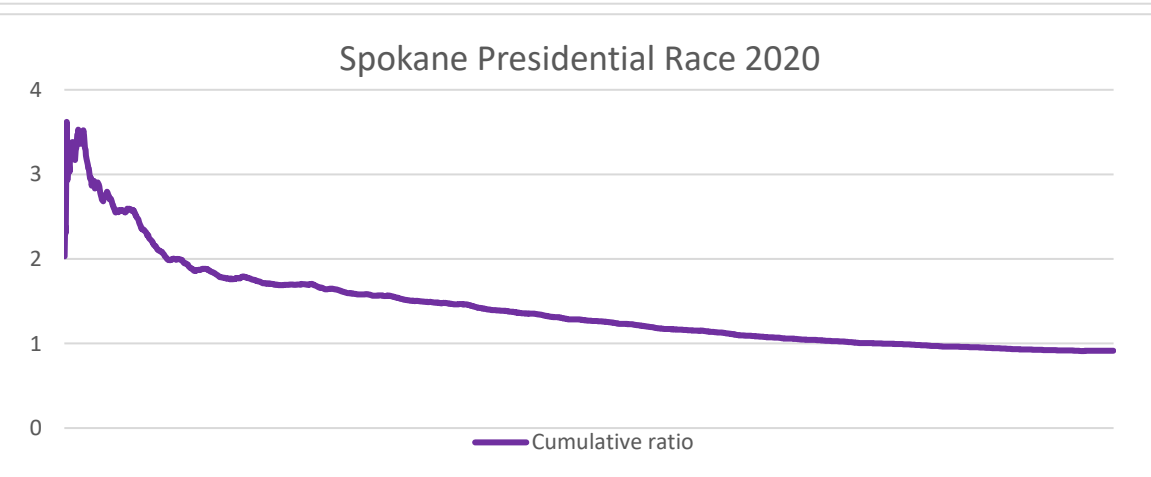

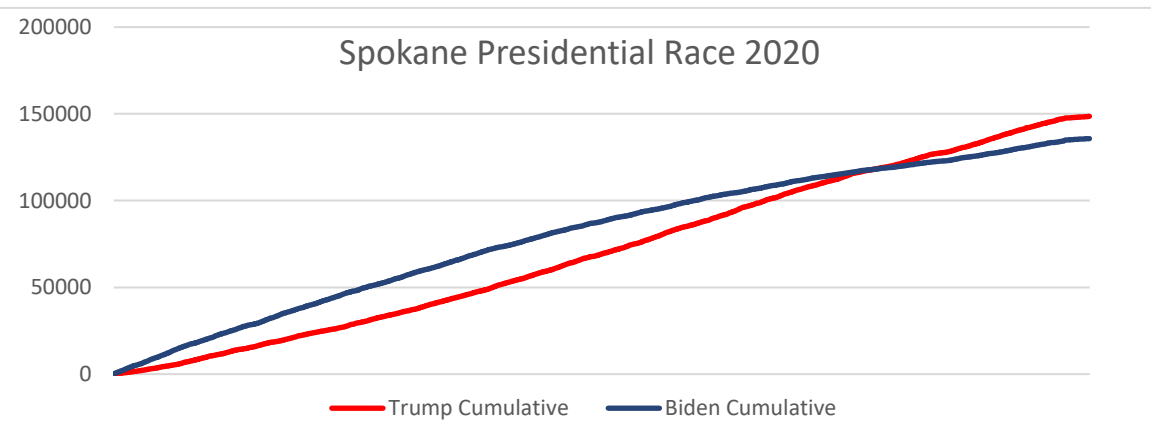

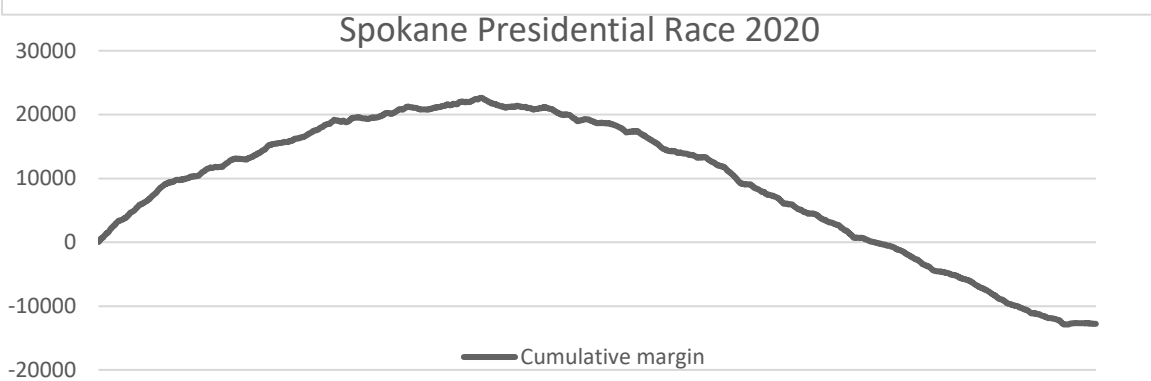

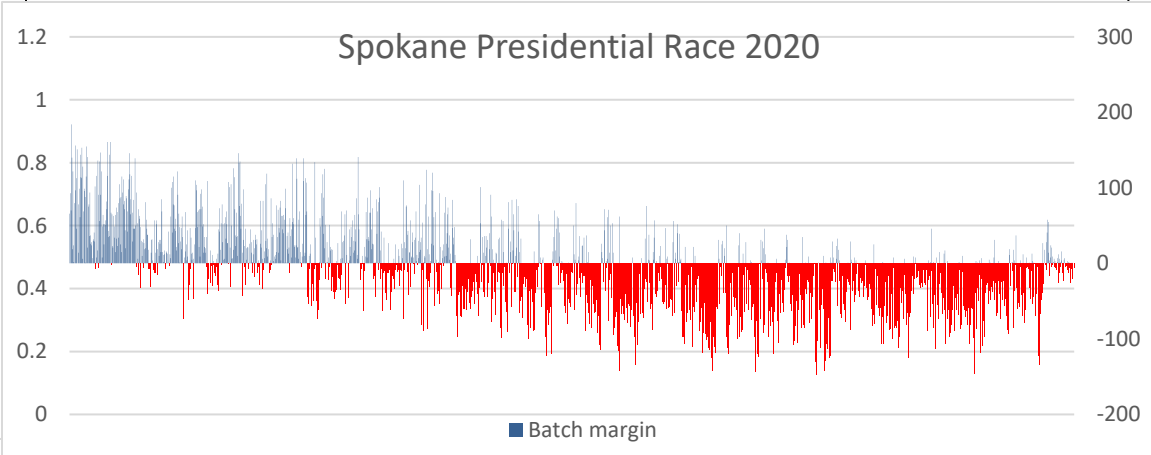

Batches are 300 ballots or less, depending on the county.

2. The second chart shows the margin of victory of the running totals, or cumulative margin of victory.
3. The third chart shows the vote totals over time for Biden and Trump
4. The bottom chart on each page is the Biden/Trump cumulative ratio. (For counties Trump won, it is the Trump/Biden cumulative ratio.)

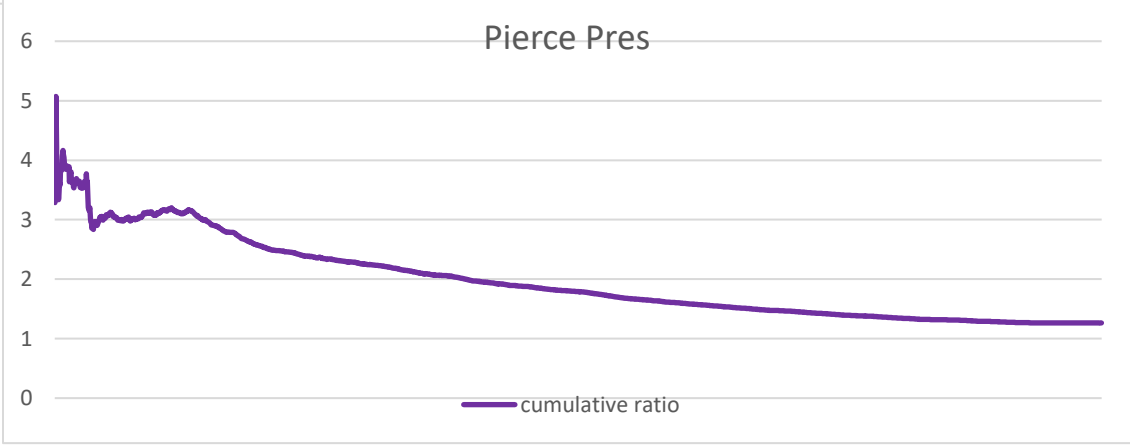

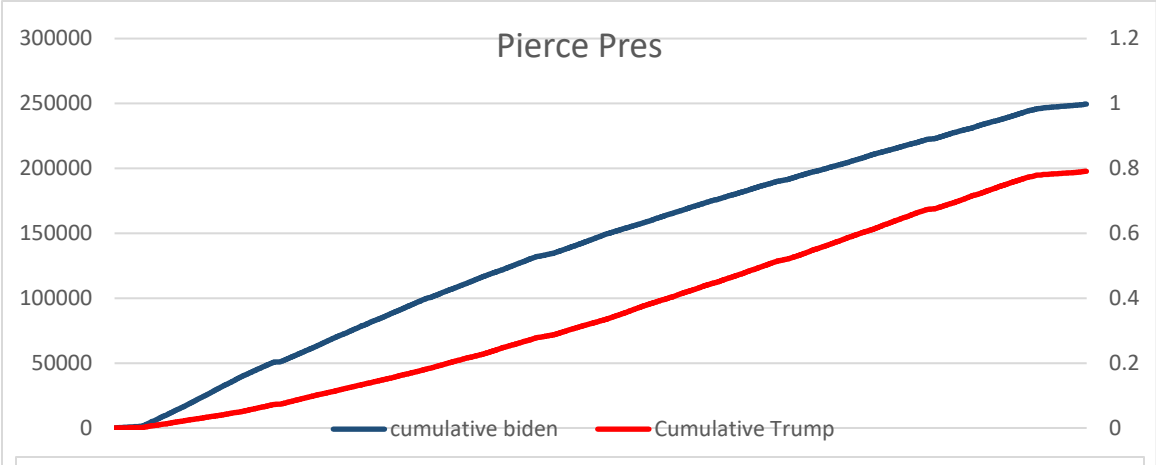

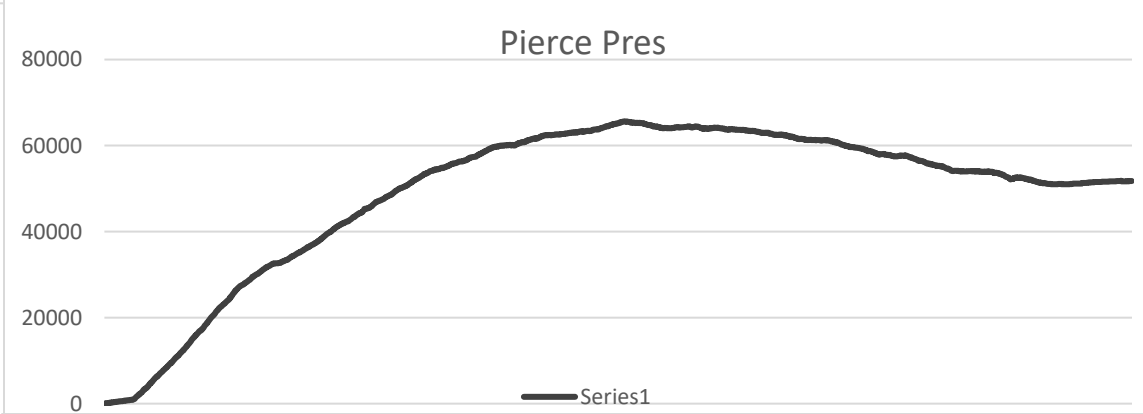

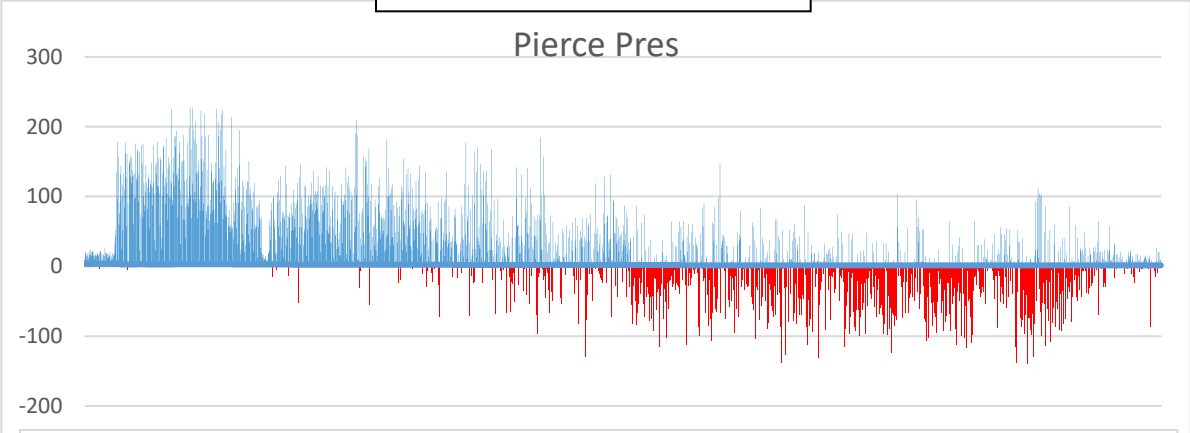

Observations:

- The early votes are heavily democrat.
- Sudden change of pace in several occurred around the halfway point, give or take.
- Biden has a jump start, with huge margin of victory, even in counties that Trump won.
- Biden’s margin of victory gets very large, peaks, then narrows back down.
- In many counties Trump won, he was never ahead in votes until the end.
- All counties have similar traits, many with a common theme: Biden sweeps the early batches.
- Ratio of Biden:Trump was much higher in the beginning than the end of the vote counting.
- Cumulative margin of victory typically grows at an even rate, and would show a straighter line, where many of these are curved, showing a “peak” before narrowing down and in some cases even losing the lead after a large margin of victory early on.
